The concept of handicap is widely used in sports like golf and football, offering a perspective on unequal competition. In this article, we will focus on the concept of handicap in golf and football. What is a handicap in golf? In the world of golf, a handicap zero refers to a player with a skill level developed by the USGA (United States Golf Association) and affiliated with the world. This handicap represents the average of a player's ability in a round. Negative values indicate higher ability, while positive values indicate lower ability. The handicap system was first used by the first president of the PGA, Mr. E. Green, on the first day of the 1938/39 season. But the system moved to the United States Golf Association for the 1939 season. History of the Everon
